MANDY HERBERT

Henvey Inlet First Nation Council

VOTE If you control the flow of information, you can control the conversation around important issues. The more freely information flows (transparency), the stronger the society becomes, because that's when the people can hold their governments accountable.

VOTE With over 20 years experience in the fields of administration, finance, business management, accounting, and communications, combined with over a decade of post-secondary education in Law, Psychology, and Indigenous Relations, I possess a unique set of skills that I will always passionately pursue the opportunity to share with you. I will continue to run for council until a majority decides that they are ready for positive and progressive change.

This year, your administration mailed out voting ballots strategically while implementing an extension date to the candidate brochure mail outs (while not all candidates were in favor of this extension). You are not in control of the flow of information that is designed to inform you of the options you have. Members continue to receive mail out packages containing dozens of pages of legal jargon most people don't even understand. Printing and postage for those mail outs continue to be justified while election candidates this year were required to pay out of pocket to print over 800 copies of their platform, only to be mailed out a week after the voting ballots.

"Transparency is in the flow of information. Ask yourself, do I really know what's going on?"
